

Emma Howie

Assistant Planner

Emma is a confident and enthusiastic member of the team with excellent attention to detail, providing valuable support on a wide range of planning projects for clients.

BSc Economics and Geography – University of Reading

MSc Spatial Planning and Development – Henley Business School, University of Reading

Emma has joined us as the newest assistant planner in the London office. She has recently completed her master's course in Spatial Planning and Development at Henley Business School, University of Reading. Prior to this she spent three years also at the University of Reading, studying a BSc in Economics and Geography.

She had previously gained work experience at Gerald Eve and Oxford Properties, and now works within the leisure team here at Planning Potential. She enjoys working the wide range of projects covered by the team and is really enjoying her new role.

Outside work Emma enjoys meeting friends, going out for meals, and loves spending time outside – following her move away from the family farm.
